Introduction<sup>1</sup>

Coverdale was never formally deprived as bishop of Exeter because the Marian regime regarded him as an intruder. The last we hear of him as bishop is on 1 September 1553 when he appeared before the privy council and was ordered 'to attend until the lords' pleasures be further known'.<sup>2</sup> This quickly became house arrest, a situation he remained in for almost 18 months as the government prevaricated.

It is likely that Coverdale would have been martyred like Cranmer, Hooper, Ridley and other leading protestant divines had not the king of Denmark, Christian III, intervened on his behalf.<sup>3</sup> Christian was mobilised by Coverdale's brother-in-law, John Macalpine, who was professor of divinity at Copenhagen University.<sup>4</sup> The king's intervention made Mary hesitate. She told Christian that Coverdale was only under arrest because he owed the Exchequer money. But this seems to have been an excuse to buy time.<sup>5</sup> Eventually, in February 1555 Coverdale and his family were allowed to travel to Denmark and an awkward situation was ended.<sup>6</sup>

Veysey was reappointed bishop of Exeter by royal letters patent on 28 September 1553.<sup>7</sup> He remained in office until his death on 23 October of the following year.<sup>8</sup> For the first few months Veysey resided at Exeter instituting and ordaining. But in the New Year he retreated to Sutton Coldfield<sup>9</sup> and left the running of the diocese to his deputies, John Blaxton and Thomas Sotherne.<sup>10</sup>

The main task confronting them was the removal of the see's married clergy. This was ordered by the royal injunctions of March 1554.<sup>11</sup> The evictions began the following month and continued until after Veysey's death.<sup>12</sup> Approximately 70 clerics or fifteen percent of the see's beneficed priests were affected. Some 90 livings gained new incumbents.<sup>13</sup> As was the case elsewhere, about a third of those clerics who had been removed found other benefices in the south-west under Mary. Ostensibly, these were the priests whose wives had died or who had agreed to renounce their spouses: the royal injunctions allowed such men to be rehabilitated upon performance of a penance. Ironically, the new livings which they acquired were invariably those from which married clergy had been ejected.<sup>14</sup>

Veysey's register is discussed in Appendix 3 of my introduction to Coverdale's register.

<sup>14</sup> The process went into reverse when Elizabeth came to the throne. Clergy who had been evicted under Mary swapped livings with their replacements in an attempt to restore the position of 1553. Just as Mary disregarded her step-brother's deeds, so Elizabeth drew a veil over her step-sister's dealings.
