

The Parker Certificate for the Diocese of Exeter: An Edition and Analysis

Introduction¹

Matthew Parker was greatly concerned by the state of the English clergy when he became archbishop of Canterbury in 1559. The turbulent years of the mid-century had resulted in a 'great want of ministers'.² The stop-gap measure of recruiting 'sundry artificers and others.....of base occupations' had done 'more hurt than good' to the reputation of the Church.³ A longer-term strategy was needed and this was heralded by the surveys or certificates that the archbishop commissioned from his diocesans.

Parker wanted to know⁴

- the names of cathedral dignitaries and prebendaries
- the names of rectors, vicars and curates
- the degrees they held
- whether they were married
- whether they were resident and if not where they were living
- whether they provided hospitality
- whether they were learned and able to preach
- whether they were licensed to preach and did so
- whether they were unordained

Parker issued his commissions in two batches on 18 November 1560⁵ and 1 October 1561.⁶ They coincided with the metropolitical visitation of Canterbury Province that his suffragans were undertaking for him. The certificates were essentially a summary of their findings and a quality check on their work. Bishops in the first batch were given two and a half months in which to submit their replies⁷ and it is likely that a similar deadline was imposed on those in the second group.

Nineteen out of a possible twenty-two surveys have survived amongst the Parker manuscripts in Corpus Christi College Cambridge.⁸ Four are incomplete, that for Coventry & Lichfield substantially so.⁹ They are written on paper and are, for the most part, bound up in two volumes, numbers 97 and 122. The exceptions are the certificates for Ely and Canterbury dioceses which are separately preserved as manuscripts 580B and 580C. Bishop William Alley's return for Exeter occupies folios 156-83 of volume 97, an oblong book measuring 315mm x 413mm. The certificate has been bound in horizontally to accommodate its 'portrait' style as opposed to the 'landscape' orientation of most of the other surveys. Parker seems to have wanted his diocesans to provide their answers in a tabular format, presumably to make comparison easier. He enclosed an example of what he had in mind with his second batch of commissions.¹⁰ I have adapted Alley's certificate to this style and translated the Latin text into English.

Analysis

The Exeter survey has been discussed on several occasions but has never been examined in full or in detail.¹¹ Despite its neat and tidy appearance it is likely that the information the return contains was hastily assembled since there are numerous errors, inconsistencies and omissions. The manuscript is also undated and in common with the majority of the Parker certificates there is no covering letter to indicate when it was sent to the archbishop.

An approximate date for the survey's production can be provided by comparing the incumbents listed in the return with the entries in Alley's institution register. This shows that the certificate belongs to the second batch of commissions. All clerics admitted to livings up to and including 9 November 1561 when William Launder was instituted to St Dominick appear in the return as do Robert Vyne and Oliver Whiddon who became rectors of St Mary Major Exeter and North Bovey on 17 December 1561 and 9 April 1562.

⁸ London, Winchester, Rochester, Peterborough, St Asaph, Llandaff, Coventry & Lichfield, Lincoln, Gloucester, Bath & Wells, Bangor, Worcester, Bristol, Hereford, Exeter, Salisbury, Norwich, Ely and Canterbury are the extant surveys; Chichester, Oxford and St David's the missing ones.

⁹ Only the archdeaconry of Coventry has survived for this large diocese. The other incomplete surveys are Hereford, Lincoln and London.

Vyne and Whiddon's inclusion is puzzling. None of the other clerics who were admitted to livings after Launder are mentioned and the benefices they came to occupy are shown either as vacant or held by the men they replaced. Possibly the return was substantially complete by the middle of November 1561 but further work was deemed necessary which delayed its despatch. There may also have been problems with Alley's visitation of his diocese. This began at the end of July 1561 and was still in progress on 29 December, which suggests that the bishop's inquiries about his clergy were far from finished.

The survey omits a number of benefices. It has entries for 562 parishes (rectories, vicarages and perpetual curacies) and 28 sinecures¹² whereas the totals for the diocese at this time are 594¹³ and 36.¹⁴ I have added an appendix listing the omissions and their incumbents where they can be identified. The certificate also includes 51 dependent chapelries served by curates. The full total is likely to have been nearer 89.¹⁵

One hundred and eleven of the parishes and chapelries listed in the certificate lack the names of their incumbents or are entirely blank. Twenty-five are marked vacant but the rest seem to be the result of scribal sloth: a failure to enter information already obtained or more plausibly a failure to obtain the information in the first place. Many of the empty entries are for perpetual curacies. The clergy who served them were appointed directly by the patrons of the livings and therefore were not instituted. The only way for bishops to know who they were would be to visit the cures themselves.

Where incumbents are named, the details about them – whether they were graduates (G in my table), married (M), hospitable (H), resident (R), or preachers (P) – are often incomplete. Incumbents were sometimes hard to track down and get answers from and so a good deal of the information may well have come from churchwardens and other parish worthies.¹⁶

The following are specific examples of mistakes and inconsistencies in Alley's certificate. Most involve pluralists and point to a lack of co-ordination between the scribes responsible for the return. Quite possibly the certificate was compiled by the staff of the four archdeacons of the diocese, but if so no-one acted as editor-in-chief to smooth out the rough edges and make a unity of the parts.

- Richard Holland is recorded as vicar of Kenwyn & Kea but in fact never held the living.
- Matthew Cruse is noted as a pluralist under Cruwys Morchard but not under Landulph.
- John Shilston vicar of Spreyton is reported as residing at Morchard Bishop but Morchard is omitted from the return and in any event Shilston never held the living.
- George Harvie was rector of Tidcombe Portion Tiverton and of Stoke Fleming but the entries are not cross-referenced.
- George Mason held Stokenham as well as Upton Helions and Cardinham but the certificate does not say so.
- Richard Estcott appears as rector of Bishop's Nympton but no mention is made of his other living, East Anstey, one of the omitted benefices.
- Richard Estyn is only noted as a pluralist at Ideford; the entry for his other living, Goran, states that he was not a pluralist.
- William Tucker or Toker was both vicar of Ermington and rector of Horwood but the certificate treats him as two separate persons.
- St Ewe is recorded as vacant but Hugh Atwill had held it since February 1560; he also held Calverleigh, the entry for which fails to mention that he was a pluralist.
- Richard Weston held Ashprington and Petrockstow but the entry for the latter states that he did not hold any other livings in the diocese.
- William Woodward held Lanivet and Lamorran but the entry for the former reports that he was not a pluralist.
- Thomas Kent archdeacon of Totnes and rector of Tedburn St Mary and Holsworthy died on or about 26 December 1561; the entry for his archdeaconry does not name him but records that the preferment was vacant; the entry for Holsworthy implies that he was still alive whilst the entry for Tedburn states that he was dead.
- 10 parishes belonging to Shirwell deanery are listed in Torrington deanery.
- Newton St Petrock is listed under Hartland deanery instead of Torrington deanery.

These shortcomings apart, what does Alley's certificate tell us about the clergy of Devon and Cornwall? Four hundred and six men are named in his survey. I have added biographical detail to the information provided by the return. Here are the key points to emerge:

- with the exception of six cathedral prebendaries and five curates¹⁷, all the clerics held parish livings in the south-west.
- the majority were local.¹⁸
- a large proportion were aged with many being in their 50s and 60s.¹⁹
- most had held their livings a length of time or had served at lower levels in the diocese and had worked their way up to a benefice.²⁰
- half were deemed 'sufficiently learned' or better.²¹
- approximately one in ten were unable to understand Latin.
- the rest were designated 'moderately learned'.
- 135 had degrees.²²
- 310 were resident.
- 288 provided hospitality.
- 41 were married.
- 38 preached.
- 98 held two or more livings in the diocese whilst a further 13 combined a parish in the south-west with a benefice elsewhere.

There is nothing here that is especially novel or surprising. The 1560s came at the very end of the later middle ages for the English clergy. The tumultuous events of the previous quarter of a century – the Henrician and Edwardian Reformations and the Marian Reaction – had temporarily stopped recruitment into the ministry. But whilst there was a lack of new blood, there was not yet a lack of ministers. This was because the shortfall in recruitment was counterbalanced by the opportunities for advancement that were given to the underclass of unbeneficed that populated the pre-Reformation church. On top of this there was the entry into the clerical marketplace of former monks and chantry priests. As one door closed so another

¹⁷ Richard Petre, Henry Squire, Robert Brock, William Evance, Robert Lougher and Thomas Hoper were the prebendaries whilst John Jackman, John Harvy, Roger Turpyn, Philip Tomkyn and John Mychell the curates. Lougher was soon to gain preferment in the south-west, whilst Evance had served as vicar of Bishop's Nympton during the 1550s

¹⁸ Using ordination records and other sources, I have established the likely geographical origins of 238 of the 406: 193 were locals and the rest outsiders.

¹⁹ The sample size is 254 of which 176 seem to have been in their 50s and 60s.

opened. These factors kept the early Elizabethan Church in the south-west staffed as did the remoteness of the region. It was never much of a place for the upwardly mobile. North Devon and a good deal of Cornwall were especially unattractive for career-minded clerics. This was in sharp contrast to Ely diocese, a small see overshadowed by Cambridge University. When Bishop Richard Cox made his return to Parker in January 1561 he reported that only a third of his parishes were served by resident incumbents. The rest were either vacant (24%), impoverished perpetual curacies (9%) or held by non-residents (34%). 'Pity and weep for this diocese', Cox wrote despairingly, 'and if the same applies elsewhere, pity the condition of the Church of England'.²³

Cox's report was made 12 months earlier than Alley's return and this may have made a difference. The turmoil of the opening years of Elizabeth's reign, when clerics displaced under Mary for being married attempted to regain their lost livings, had abated. The commissioners who conducted the royal visitation of Canterbury and York Provinces in 1559 had reinstated many, whilst others may have informally exchanged livings with their Marian replacements, the latter moving to the benefices that the Marian ejectees had been admitted to after they had made their peace with Mary's government by giving up their wives.²⁴

The real problem facing Alley in the early 1560s was the aged state of his clergy. Not only were a large number of priests in their 50s and 60s but some were considerably older.²⁵ Incumbents who in the pre-Reformation Church would have looked to retire and obtain pensions from their livings were forced to soldier on because there was no one to replace them. Fortunately, at this difficult moment, the later medieval clerical recruitment pattern reasserted itself for one last time. At the end of the 1560s and the beginning of the 1570s, candidates for ordination once again came forward in great numbers. The first decade of Elizabeth's reign had been a period of wait and see for many would-be clerics. Would the Elizabethan Church grow roots or would it go the way of its Edwardian and Marian predecessors? When it became clear that Elizabeth's regime had stability, men from obscure backgrounds once again opted for an ecclesiastical career just as their forebears had done centuries earlier.

²⁵ At least 12 of my sample.

The quality of this wave of recruitment must be open to doubt.²⁶ But it provided a much-needed breathing space whilst more substantial changes in the composition of the English clergy were taking place. The early 1580s mark the start of this new regime. Candidates for the ministry now faced stiffer tests of fitness.²⁷ Soon only university graduates were appearing at ordination ceremonies. By the early years of the seventeenth century, a balance had been struck between the supply of clerics and the opportunities available to them as rectors and vicars. A career path existed which led from Oxbridge to curacies and benefices.²⁸

The professionalisation of the English clergy went hand in hand with the spread of protestantism. Only now in the later years of the sixteenth century did the south-west begin to experience the impact of doctrinal change on a significant scale as religious progressives gained livings.²⁹ This was in stark contrast to the 1560s when only a handful of clerics could legitimately be described as reformist.³⁰ Alley, like Coverdale before him, was forced to work with men whose allegiance to the Church of England was lukewarm or opportunistic at best.³¹ By the early seventeenth century this outlook had disappeared and anglicanism had gained a secure foothold capable of rivalling the alternative attractions of puritanism and catholic recusancy.

⁴⁷⁶ See CTRs Part 5 (Quethiock).

⁴⁷⁷ Robert Swynmer (or Swymmer) the former prior of St German's was adm rector in 1554 and probably held the living until his death in or before Jan 1559 (see CTRs Part 4: Talland); Richard Phillips was adm in 1574 on the death of the previous incumbent (Bradbridge 224); it is possible that William Todd who was displaced by Swynmer in 1554 may have regained North Hill in the 1560s (Veysey 1225).

⁵¹⁵ Little Petherick, St Ervan, Padstow, St Merryn and St Issey were peculiars of the bishop of Exeter. Edmund Smale was adm rector of Little Petherick in 1554 following the resignation of Simon Atkins (Veysey restored 65); William Collyns was adm in 1562 on the death of the previous incumbent which was probably Atkins (Alley 148; see CTRs Part 5: Sutcombe).

⁵¹⁶ Roger Alley, Bishop Alley's son, was adm rector in Mar 1561 (Alley 85); but he was probably supplanted by Nicholas Nycholls who had been adm in 1548 and who had lost St Ervan at Mary's accession (see CTRs Part 5: St Kew).

⁵¹⁷ Richard Olyver was vicar 1547-64d (see CTRs Part 6: Tywardreath).

⁵¹⁸ Thomas Tom was adm vicar in 1557 following the death of William Fawell bishop of Hippo and perhaps remained vicar until 1571 when the next admission was made following the death of the previous incumbent (Turberville 122 and 128; Bradbridge 70).

⁵¹⁹ John Consytt was adm vicar in 1557 (Turberville 97) but seems to have lost the living at Elizabeth's accession; John Mekyns was adm vicar in 1562 on the death of the previous incumbent (Alley 142; see above Modbury); as Consytt was still alive at this date (the Exeter Dean & Chapter re-presented him on the day after Mekyns' admission [ECA, D&C.3551, fo 98r]) the previous incumbent must have been Christopher Crofft who had been adm in 1543 and who had resigned in favour of Consytt in 1557 (Veysey 985). Presumably Consytt was a Marian appointee whom the Elizabeth regime did not recognise.
