Introduction¹

A full introduction will be added at a later date. A few brief remarks about Fox's appointment and his register now follow.

Fox was provided to Exeter by Pope Innocent VIII on 29 January 1487, the same day that Courtenay was provided to Winchester diocese.² Henry VII was restructuring his regime. Fox was a close associate from the days of exile in France.³ He was now also appointed keeper of the privy seal, a post that Courtenay had previously held.⁴ Courtenay was being moved into political retirement. His reward was the richly endowed see of Winchester. Fox was granted the temporalities of Exeter on 2 April and was probably consecrated bishop at Norwich six days later.⁵

No sede vacante record exists, probably because there was no formal sede vacante. The first institution of Fox's episcopate is dated 4 April and was performed by William Sylke who is described as vicar-general.⁶ Sylke had been Courtenay's vicar-general and seems to have been carrying on in this role during the changeover.⁷ On 6 March he issued letters dimissory as Courtenay's vicar-general.⁸ He did not receive his commission as Fox's vicar-general until 31 May.⁹

Fox's register is an improvement on that of his predecessor. It spans the entirety of his episcopate. But it is not a complete register. Once again there is no record of licences granted, mandates issued and correspondence received. And there are losses from the inquisitions sub-register which evidently occurred before Fox's register was foliated and united with the registers of Bothe, Courtenay and King.¹⁰ The folios of the inquisitions sub-register are also bound out of order. The rebinding of the 1920s did not rectify this.¹¹ The correct sequence is given below.

[Common Register of Richard Fox bishop of Exeter]

283¹¹²¹. 31 Aug 1491: Bampton Rectory

Fox appropriates the rectory to Buckland Abbey and establishes a vicarage.¹¹²² Thomas Olyver abbot of Buckland¹¹²³ wants to increase the revenues of his abbey so that the monks can continue to provide hospitality. He has obtained the king's permission to add Bampton to the abbey's possessions and now seeks Fox's approval which the bishop gives providing the interests of the Exeter Dean & Chapter and archdeacon of Exeter in whose jurisdiction Bampton lies are respected. Proctors for the parties have been appointed and appear before Fox who decrees that vicars of Bampton are to receive £20 a year in four equal instalments at Christmas, Easter, the Nativity of St John the Baptist¹¹²⁴ and Michaelmas¹¹²⁵, all pence accruing from the reading of obits from the pulpit and 1d from all oblations made at burials and at trentals and anniversaries. Vicars are also to have the use of the hall, chambers, kitchen and rooms beneath in the rectory house together with three gardens and a dovecote situated in another garden nearby.¹¹²⁶ In return they are to maintain the buildings assigned to them and the walls of the gardens and cut the hedges. Buckland Abbey is to pay the taxes due on the benefice and the stipend of chaplain who is to serve St Katherine and St Petroc chapels in the parish. The monks are also to pay 20d at Easter to the poor of Bampton and three pensions from the revenues of the rectory. These last are 20s to bishops of Exeter, 20s to the dean & chapter (for the use of the cathedral secondaries) and 40d to the archdeacon of Exeter. They are all to be paid in equal portions at Easter and Michaelmas. Failure to pay the pensions will result in the sequestration of the rectory. Because the church courts do not have jurisdiction over pensions the abbot and convent are to give security for their payments.¹¹²⁷ Copies follow of the king's letters patent of 9 Dec 1487 exempting the abbey from the statute of mortmain¹¹²⁸, the dean & chapter's letters of 10 Aug 1491 appointing M Thomas Erle np¹¹²⁹ their proctor and the abbey's letters of 1 Aug 1491 appointing M John Atwill ¹¹²² This was not the first attempt to appropriate Bampton to Buckland. Pope Eugenius IV had done so in 1443 but his successor, Nicholas V, annulled the act. This gave rise to litigation and confusion (Reg Lacy III, pp. 106, 113-14, 116-19, 175, 300-10).
