Introduction

Coverdale was never formally deprived as bishop of Exeter because the Marian regime regarded him as an intruder. The last we hear of him as bishop is on 1 September 1553 when he appeared before the privy council and was ordered 'to attend until the lords' pleasures be further known'.¹ This quickly became house arrest, a situation he remained in for almost 18 months as the government prevaricated.

It is likely that Coverdale would have been martyred like Cranmer, Hooper, Ridley and other leading protestant divines had not the king of Denmark, Christian III, intervened on his behalf.² Christian was mobilised by Coverdale's brother-in-law, John Macalpine, who was professor of divinity at Copenhagen University.³ The king's intervention made Mary hesitate. She told Christian that Coverdale was only under arrest because he owed the Exchequer money. But this seems to have been an excuse to buy time.⁴ Eventually, in February 1555 Coverdale and his family were allowed to travel to Denmark and an awkward situation was ended.⁵

Veysey was reappointed bishop of Exeter by royal letters patent on 28 September 1553.⁶ He remained in office until his death on 23 October of the following year.⁷ For the first few months Veysey resided at Exeter instituting and ordaining. But in the New Year he retreated to Sutton Coldfield⁸ and left the running of the diocese to his deputies, John Blaxton and Thomas Sotherne.⁹

The main task confronting them was the removal of the see's married clergy. This was ordered by the royal injunctions of March 1554.¹⁰ The evictions began the following month and continued until after Veysey's death.¹¹ Approximately 70 clerics or fifteen percent of the see's beneficed priests were affected. Some 90 livings gained new incumbents.¹² As was the case elsewhere, about a third of those clerics who had been removed found other benefices in the south-west under Mary. Ostensibly, these were the priests whose wives had died or who had agreed to renounce their spouses: the royal injunctions allowed such men to be rehabilitated upon performance of a penance. Ironically, the new livings which they acquired were invariably those from which married clergy had been ejected.¹³

Veysey's register is discussed in Appendix 3 of my introduction to Coverdale's register.

¹³ The process went into reverse when Elizabeth came to the throne. Clergy who had been evicted under Mary swapped livings with their replacements in an attempt to restore the position of 1553. Just as Mary disregarded her step-brother's deeds, so Elizabeth drew a veil over her step-sister's dealings.

¹⁴ See Alley 55 and Parker Certificate.

¹⁵ See Parker Certificate (Clyst Hydon).

¹⁶ See Veysey 461 and Coverdale 4A. Crispyn died in 1551 and it is likely that George Chidley or Chudley held Harberton 1551-53. The scribe has probably chosen to ignore this because the Marian authorities did not recognise many of the institutions made during Edward VI's reign.

¹⁷ See Bradbridge 244.

¹⁸ See Veysey 639.

¹⁹ See Bradbridge 37 and Parker Certificate.

²⁰ See Veysey 615.

²¹ See Woolton 105 and Parker Certificate; Chubbe had already been instituted to Thorncombe in 1551 on the presentation of the king (see Coverdale 3). Either there was a dispute about the right of presentation or Chubbe was safeguarding himself against the Marian regime.

²² See Veysey 996.

5. 16 Dec 1553: Morchard Bishop Rectory

[M] Humphrey Stanley²³ is instituted by Veysey in his palace on the resignation of John Harman clerk.²⁴ He is presented by the queen.

³⁴⁶ James Haddon was granted the deanery by Edward VI in Jan 1553 following Simon Heynes' death but was not installed until Jul by which time the king had died; he was therefore a lame duck dean and never took up residence (see Coverdale 31 and 32; Fasti 3, p. 9; ECA, D&C.3707, fo 42r). Haddon went into exile in May 1554 and was deprived from office (Garrett, Marian Exiles, p. 169; Fasti 3, p. 9). John Moreman was chosen to replace him but he died in Aug 1554 before the Exeter chapter could hold an election (ibid). Thomas Reynolds was elected dean in Feb 1555 in succession to Reginald Pole, Heynes and Haddon being regarded as intruders by the Marian authorities (see Vage, 'Thesis', pp. 30, 47-48; CTRs Part 5: Menheniot and Cheriton Fitzpaine; Fasti 3, p. 9).
